Gunners Training Institute at Kaesong

- On 7 June 1952 the 195 Division, 65 Army, established the Special Chinese Communist Army Gunners Training Institute at approximately 126-33, 37-58 (BT-859041), in Kaesong with the mission of improving the gunners and increasing their effectiveness when cooperating with infantry, artillery, and tank troops. Each battalion of the 195 Division established a joint operations control post comprising infantry, artillery, and tank troops with 12 or 15 officers of battalion commander or company commander rank to conduct cooperative missions with the gunner trainees.
- In early June there were 250 trainees, selected from among gunners of each company in the 195 Division, and 7 instructors of battalion commander rank or higher at this training institute. The trainees were divided into 3 classes: recoilless gun class with 60 trainees, rocket launcher class with 80 trainees, and mortar class with 110 trainees. During the first month of the 2-month training period, lectures were given on range-finding, firing, and construction of gun positions. The second month was spent in practicing these lessons.

Infantry School at Chijong-dong

- In late June and early July 1952, 430 men and 30 instructors were at a Chinese Communist army infantry school which was in a field approximately 400 meters east of Chijong-dong (125-54, 38-44) (YC-5291). The students were to be commissioned as second lieutenants when they completed a 3-month course in map-reading and small unit tactics.
